

RIGHT APPROACH

Dr A K Pandey

DECLARATION

This is to certify that

1. The article "Right Approach" authored by Dr A. K. Pandey is an original article of mine.
2. I have stated the source from which ideas excerpts have been used in the article, both in the text as well as list of references. If no such references are given, that means that all ideas and text is my original works.
3. The submitted article has not been published or submitted for publication elsewhere.
4. This is an electronically submitted through the email address of the author, and forms a part of the text submitted. Hence it does not carry the signature of the author.
5. I agree to have this declaration published with the article.

(Born in 1956 and an educational administrator by profession, Dr A. K. Pandey is the CEO of Pandey Education Trust (A Trusted Name in Quality Education Consultancy Services), 4 KHA 8, Jawahar Nagar, Jaipur-302004, Rajasthan. The author can be reached at edustrust@rediffmail.com)

The heading is right approach but I honestly believe that there is nothing like right and wrong approach in life but it is the time and place which makes our approach right or wrong. A particular behaviour may be right at any point of time and place but the same will prove itself wrong with the change of place and time. Conditioning to a particular situation may result as we desired and with same conditions we may not be able to get the same result if repeated. We have told from our childhood that practice makes a man perfect but in reality it is the perfectness which is brought into practice. The right approach for any person is to do quality work irrespective of his position and power. This quality work should be up to a standard when he himself gets a feeling that no one else can do the work better than him. This feeling brings satisfaction and satisfaction paves the way of success. In this world everybody grumbles that he has no authority to do this work otherwise he would have done it better than someone else forgetting his own work where he never applies quality control.

An old man, who was in construction business, wanted voluntary retirement. He told his Managing Director that he worked a lot and wanted to lead a peaceful life with his wife in his village. He knew that the regular income will stop but he will be able to carry on his life with the reserve fund that he had. The MD was pained because a good and devoted worker was leaving the company but he told the man, “As you have served the company for so many years, please construct a house for me also before you leave us.”

The old man reluctantly said yes but he was not devoted to his work. Anyhow, he started the work. He did not bother to make a quality control of the materials to be used during construction. He completed the work and requested his MD to check the same before he goes. The MD reached to the site and after a quick look to the newly constructed building handed over the key to the old man saying that, “This is your house and it is a gift from my side to you for your long inning played with the company.” This action astonished the old man and he started thinking should he had known it, he would not have constructed the house in the way he did.

A person who has apathy towards the job given to him can't accomplish another job given to him. Quality and satisfaction has to be applied to oneself first. It is always said that do your duty and leave the result to almighty which we generally tag with fate but we forget to analyze it which tells that do your work with quality, put your maximum to do the job and the result is certainly be as desired. We compare our work with someone doing some other work become victim of frustration and stress. Frustration and stress are not new words but in the way these are being used now a day's one must get a feeling that they are the new members of English dictionary. Evaluate the right approach for your life and the job in which you are presently engaged and close your eyes from other related works. Prove yourself in the job and the time is not far way when you will be spotted by someone for a job better than this and so on but reflection should go from your side that you believe in quality work.

We see a lot of people grumbling not getting the chance to prove their worth. Everyone irrespective of their area of operation has got equal chance to show his capabilities. Capabilities are directly proportional to the labour and effort employed. Probability of not getting success may be the result of our wrong understanding of the work and chances are that we might have chosen a work more than our worth seeing the success of someone else. The chance of being unsuccessful is there only when we are unable to face the challenges. As soon as we get a challenge we start blaming God for the same forgetting that challenges are frictional forces of life which act in the same way as the grease works for vehicles.

Challenges are our tests by the nature to know whether we are fit for the particular job which we have undertaken or not? This happens every where. A life without challenges is the same as driving a vehicle on a national highway on top speed. Driving in a crowded street is the test of driver's capability where he is subjected to test not only of his basic skills i.e. driving but other related skills to driving i.e. concentration, coordination and so on. We are listening from our childhood that life is not bed of roses. I never understood the line. Life is not what we feel but what we live in. It is not the way of living in this world we are interested in but we are more interested in dreaming of living well. Do not compare yourself or your position with anyone. Your suffering increases multi-fold the moment you start comparing with others. Every individual has to face & live with his unique situations (and is the best judge), which are generally not common to anyone else's situation & position. Be happy with what you have, and be what you are. You are the only person, who is responsible for your happiness, no one else is.

Most of us during our life are more interested in getting what we desire not what we need. As soon as we are able to differentiate between desires and need our life become happy and we are not stressed. We heard people saying that unless we are unsatisfied we can't progress but it does not tell that we should make our life hell having uncontrolled dissatisfactions. Progress does not come only through dissatisfaction but through constant eagerness and there is difference between dissatisfaction and eagerness. Life definition differs with person to person and so is the happiness and prosperity. Sometimes we confuse ourselves forgetting that the meaning of happiness and prosperity differ with person, place and time.

A farmer had two daughters. He married them well. One with a farmer having huge pieces of farm house having fertile land and other to a porter having a factory of earthen pottery. Both were happy. One day farmer wished to visit his daughters after a long time gap. First he decided to go to his younger daughter married to the porter. He found the daughter unhappy due to rain as it was spoiling his pottery works and the husband was disturbed as was incurring loss in his business. The daughter requested his father to pray to God for no rains so that her husband will be able to recover his loss. He patted the daughter and assured her to pray accordingly.

Then he went to his elder daughter in another city and found the daughter happier than ever. She welcomed the father and started praising her luck that God is very kind to her to give rains so that her farmhouse business is doing well and they are selling the food grains better than previous years. He requested his father at the time of departure to pray to God for rain like this so that her husband can do better and better.

The old happy father was unable to understand to pray for whom?

No one in this world gets everything according to his desire as natural resources have been equally divided amongst all. The only thing which is in the hand of human being is to churn and utilize the given resources up to the maximum and use it for going ahead in order to get the specified goal. Creativity & intelligence has been distributed normally in this world only the question is of proper utilization. You may get sometimes which you don't deserve but you will lose the same within no time if you don't know to handle the situation. Every person on this earth gets its share as nature is not choosy like human beings. We try to manage the show with your gift and neither shall you try to lose your share nor should you be greedy to get the share given to someone else.